Dear Sample Studio team,

I'm applying for the Gameplay Designer role on your co-op action game. This letter is fictional; it shows how the cover letter builds from plain paragraphs.

At Lantern Games I owned six enemy types and two boss encounters on Dungeon Delvers, built them in Blueprints, and scaled enemy health and spawn counts for one to four players. I tested every party size on every milestone, because a fight that works for four players can fall apart for one.

At Pixel Forge Studios I designed the boost and drafting system for Robo Racers and set up a weekly playtest loop with QA. Each round of findings became a tuning pass, and the live events I ran used retention data to decide which rewards to keep.

I'd welcome the chance to talk about your enemies and encounters. Thank you for your time.

Sincerely,
Alex Example
